ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to recognise and thank this study’s participants, without whom this study could not have proceeded. Thank you sincerely for sharing with me your thoughts about this important topic. In particular, I owe special thanks to the Coronial Services of New Zealand, the former Chief Coroner, Judge Neil MacLean, and the Coroners for being incredibly helpful, encouraging and supportive throughout the research process.

It is also essential to mention the tremendous support that I received from the New Zealand Law Foundation. Without their generous funding of this research, the project would not have proceeded. I would like to express my gratitude to the Director, Lynda Hagen, for her support, enthusiasm and advice. I also wish to thank Dianne Gallagher for her friendly, helpful support and assistance.

I am particularly grateful to Ben Booth and the wonderful team at Edward Elgar. Thank you for supporting this project.

I am infinitely grateful to the Dean of Law, University of Otago, Professor Mark Henaghan. I have been fortunate to have three superb heads of department at the University of Otago: Professor Peter Crampton, Professor Mark Henaghan and Professor Robin Gauld. Peter, Mark and Robin have all nurtured, encouraged, supported and inspired me. Professor Rex Ahdar deserves special mention because he spent hours reading a draft of this book and made invaluable suggestions. I am also grateful to many other academic colleagues, such as Professor Kate Diesfeld, Associate Professor Colin Gavaghan, Professor Ron Paterson, Professor Peter Skegg, Louise Delany, Dr Marie Bismark, Professor David Studdert, Professor Michelle Mello, and Professor Hank Weiss. Dr John Rutherford (Wellington pathologist) has been a wonderful mentor. Special thanks must also go to Professor Ian Freckelton QC (a coronial law expert) for being generous with his time and for providing excellent advice. I was lucky to have two wonderful research assistants: Steve Thomson and Catey Boyce. I am particularly grateful to Steve and Catey for their assistance with Chapter 6.

My literature searching was aided by fabulous support from the
Coroners’ recommendations

University of Otago law librarians and the CSNZ staff, particularly Dean Skachill, Lily Nunweek and Jackie Andrews. I am particularly thankful to Dean, Lily and their colleagues, who spent many hours putting full coronial findings onto a USB drive for me.

A constant source of inspiration came from the University of Melbourne’s public health law team, who has also been researching the Coroners Act 2008 (Vic) and the implementation of coroners’ recommendations. I have benefitted from numerous conversations with them. Another source of inspiration and encouragement is: Dr Bugeja (Coronial Prevention Unit, Coroner’s Court of Victoria, Australia). I am grateful for your guidance and conversations about the research.

Portions of Chapters 5 and 6 were published in Jennifer Moore, “An Empirical Approach to the New Zealand Government’s Review of the Coronial Jurisdiction” (2014) 21 JLM 602–26. Portions of Chapter 3 were published in Jennifer Moore, “Coroners’ Recommendations about Healthcare-related Deaths as a Potential Tool for Improving Patient Safety and Quality of Care” (2014) 127(1398) NZ Medical Journal 35. I gratefully acknowledge permission from the New Zealand Medical Journal and the Journal of Law and Medicine to reproduce portions of these articles in revised form. Portions of Chapters 2–7 were submitted to the NZ Law Foundation as a final report about the research findings. I gratefully acknowledge permission from the NZ Law Foundation and Lynda Hagen to reproduce portions of the report.

Finally, I wish to thank those people who have helped me to survive the research process. Thank you to the dream team – Dr David Kent and Joanne Kent! I am immensely grateful to Joanne Kent, who skilfully cared for Rebecca while I wrote this book. David cured Rebecca’s illnesses on numerous occasions, particularly during the winter in 2014. I would like to acknowledge my family, who are my unfailing support network. Thank you particularly to Rob, who spent many hours caring for our daughter, Rebecca, when she was born during the data collection phase of this project. Completion of this book, without Rob’s continual (and free) IT support, would have been much more arduous. Grandpa (Malcolm McDonald) and Grandma (Dr Jill Wolfgang) played a vital babysitting role, allowing me to spend hours writing. Sue and Dr David Robinson were fantastic proof readers of earlier drafts. I am grateful to Captain Ted Moore and Maryanne Moore for providing support during the final stages of writing. Thank you to Maryanne for babysitting in October 2015 while I was a Harkness Fellow in Healthcare Policy at Stanford Law School.
