Many thanks to Dr Marina Della Giusta and to Professor Mark Casson for their insightful comments and suggestions that have significantly shaped this whole book. Thanks also to Dr Sarah Jewell, Dr Steve Musson, Professor Nikos Georgantzis and Dr Nick Bardsley for their expert opinion on specific subjects within this book. Many other academics both inside and outside of the University of Reading have also provided valuable support, comments and suggestions as this project has progressed.

Outside of academia, I am indebted to the ‘Vision of Community’ articulated by a development organization I have worked with, ‘Food for the Hungry’. The ethos of this organization, along with the conversations I have had with Jonathan Tame, Director of the Jubilee Centre, have helped me along this path.

Data for the analysis was drawn mainly from The British Household Panel Survey, the Citizenship Survey and Understanding Society, full acknowledgements for which may be found in the references. I also gratefully acknowledge those who suggested improvements to the text, Eleanor and Carla in particular.

Of all the many books referenced throughout this work, the most inspirational and as yet unreferenced is the Bible, acting also as my plumb line. I add just two quotes here (NIV translation): Romans 13:8–11: ‘Let no debt remain outstanding, except the continuing debt to love one another, for he who loves his fellowman has fulfilled the law. The commandments, “Do not commit adultery”, “Do not murder”, “Do not steal”, “Do not covet”, and whatever other commandment there may be, are summed up in this one rule: “Love your neighbour as yourself”. Love does no harm to its neighbour. Therefore love is the fulfilment of the law.’ 1 John 4:8–11: ‘Whoever does not love does not know God, because God is love. This is how God showed his love among us: He sent his one and only Son into the world that we might live through him. This is love: not that we loved God, but that he loved us and sent his Son as an atoning sacrifice for our sins. Dear friends, since God so loved us, we also ought to love one another.’
