This project began while the author was serving as General Counsel for Gavi, the Vaccine Alliance, with the realization that national and international law challenges arise in so-called global development partnership initiatives. The Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, Geneva provided a perfect venue through which to study the interactions between both legal spheres. The author wishes to thank Professor Zachary Douglas QC, Professor Gian Luca Burci and Professor Jan Klabbers for valuable guidance and inspiration.

The author wishes to thank GP3 Institute law interns including Zachary Ruderman, Pauline Duong, Nicole Sebial and Alena Liang who each provided research and editorial support. The author also wishes to thank Maria Michelle who puzzled over the topic and pieced together graphic depictions of the challenges and opportunities that international cooperation presents.

The author also wishes to thank Marya Sherer Nielander, who provided detailed editorial input and read the manuscript many times to help make the book more accessible, thoughtful and relevant for its intended audience – students from the many disciplines connected to international development. Special appreciation extends to her, and to the author’s children (Madison, Jeffrey, Madeline, and Anthony) for their enduring patience, affection and encouragement; and to the author’s parents, Elizabeth and Gary Nielander; and to “The Village Women” for their unflagging support.

Finally, it must be said that Stephen Gutierrez, the publisher’s representative, demonstrated noble patience throughout.
