Contributors

John Clarke is Professor of Social Policy at the Open University, Milton Keynes, UK, where he has worked for more than 25 years. A product of the Birmingham Centre for Contemporary Cultural Studies, his work has centred on the social, cultural and political struggles around the remaking of welfare states. His most recent book is Changing Welfare, Changing States: New Directions in Social Policy (Sage, 2004). A co-authored book on New Labour’s approach to public service reform in the UK (Creating Citizen-Consumers: Changing Publics and Changing Public Services) was published by Sage in 2007.

Zsuzsa Ferge (born Kecskeméti) is Professor Emeritus at Eötvös Loránd University, Budapest. She is currently Head of the Poverty Research Center of Eotvos University, and of the unit preparing the National Program against Child Poverty, located at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. She is an economist and sociologist. Her main fields of interest have been social structure, social inequalities, poverty, the social impact of the transition in Central and Eastern-European countries, and the role of the state.

Janet Fink is Senior Lecturer in Social Policy at the Open University, Milton Keynes, UK. She is the co-author of The Family Story: Blood, Contract and Intimacy (Longman, 1999) and co-editor of Rethinking European Welfare (Sage, 2001) and editor of Care: Personal Lives and Social Policy (Policy Press, 2004). Her research interests focus on the ways in which welfare policy and practice in the immediate post-war years shaped, and were shaped by, popular culture.

John Gelissen is Assistant Professor at the Department of Methodology and Statistics at Tilburg University, the Netherlands. He received his PhD in sociology for the study Worlds of Welfare, Worlds of Consent? Public Opinion on the Welfare State (Brill, 2002) from Tilburg University in 2001. His professional interests are research methods for comparative public opinion research, and the substantive study of public opinion on social policy, social demography, and the environment.

Dirk Hofäcker works as Researcher at the State Institute for Family Research at the University of Bamberg (ifb), Germany. He worked as a Researcher in the international project GLOBALIFE – Life Courses in the Globalization Process from 2002 to 2005. His main research interests lie in the field of international comparisons, attitude research as well as in quantitative social science data analysis. His work has concentrated on cross-national comparisons of female employment patterns and its institutional backgrounds, and the comparative analysis of retirement processes.

Bjørn Hvinden is Professor, Head of Research and Deputy Director at NOVA Norwegian Social Research, Oslo. He is Director of a virtual Nordic Centre of Excellence in Welfare Research (under the NordForsk programme 2007–2011), called ‘Reassessing the Nordic Welfare Model’. He was Professor of Sociology at the University of Science and Technology (NTNU), Trondheim, 1995–2007. His areas of expertise include organizational sociology, social policy, marginality, disability, ethnicity, and comparative welfare research. His main research interests at present are active citizenship and welfare policy, non-discrimination, ICT used to promote life quality and independence for people with impairments, food safety, and the relation between migration and national welfare systems. He is co-editor and co-author of Citizenship in Nordic Welfare States (Routledge, 2007).

Kees van Kersbergen is Professor of Political Science at the Department of Political Science and Director of the research programme of the Centre for Comparative Social Studies of the Faculty of Social Sciences, both at the Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam. His research interests are in the field of comparative politics and broadly concern issues of change in politics and governance: the changing power of the national state; the changing power and position of political parties in advanced democracies; the development of welfare states and social policy in OECD countries; European integration and Europeanization.

Detlev Lück works as a Researcher in the international project ‘Job Mobilities and Family Lives in Europe’ with Professor N.F. Schneider at the University of Mainz, Germany. After studying sociology in Bamberg, he worked for the research institute IFB on family issues, for the Chair of Sociology I at the University of Bamberg in the research project ‘GLOBALIFE’, and for the section of ‘gender and food’ at the University of Hohenheim. His main research interests are: value-change, international comparison, gender, family, mobility, and social inequality.

Julia S. O’Connor is Professor of Social Policy at the University of Ulster. She is a sociologist and her main areas of research are social inequality and welfare states in comparative perspective. Current research projects include a study of convergence in social policy in the EU in the context of changes in the governance of social policy. Her work has been published in several journals and edited collections. She is co-author with Ann S. Orloff and Sheila Shaver of States, Markets, Families Gender, Liberalism and Social Policy in Australia, Canada, Great Britain and the United States (Cambridge University Press, 1999).

Wim van Oorschot is Professor of Sociology in the Department of Sociology at Tilburg University, the Netherlands, and Honorary Professor at the Center for Comparative Welfare Studies, Aalborg University, Denmark. His research interests include European comparative social policy, in particular, the fields of social security and labour market policies, the popular legitimacy base of various aspects of the welfare state among Europeans, and the relationships between welfare spending and social capital. At present he is especially interested in cultural factors as causes and consequences of social policies, focusing on public welfare values and opinions as indicators of popular welfare culture.

Michael Opielka is Professor for Social Policy at the University for Applied Sciences in Jena, Germany. In 2004–05 he was Visiting Scholar at the University of California at Berkeley, School of Social Welfare. He is Educational Professor at the Sociological Institute of the University of Bonn, and Managing Director of the Institute of Social Ecology, Koenigswinter. His main research interests are social policy, social theory and the sociology of culture and religion. Currently he heads a research project on the conceptions of the threat by Islam to Europe and is working on a cultural theory of welfare values. His recent books include Gemeinschaft in Gesellschaft. Soziologie nach Hegel und Parsons (2nd edn, 2006), Sozialpolitik. Grundlagen und vergleichende Perspektiven (2004) and Kultur vs. Religion? Soziologische Analysen moderner Wertkonflikte (2007).

Ito Peng is Associate Professor at the Department of Sociology, and Director of the Dr. David Chu Chair Program in Asia Pacific Studies at the Munk Centre for International Studies, University of Toronto. Her current research includes welfare state responses to post-industrial pressures in familialistic welfare states (Japan, Korea, Italy, and Spain), the political economy of welfare state transformations in East Asia, and immigrant women’s health and related policy implications in Ontario.
Birgit Pfau-Effinger is Professor of Sociology and Co-director of the Centre ‘Globalisation and Governance’ at the University of Hamburg. She has published in the fields of comparative welfare state analysis, labour market analysis, sociology of family and care, gender arrangements, and the relationship of culture, institutions and actors in contemporary societies. Her recent books include Culture, Welfare State and Women’s Employment in Europe (2004); The Changing Face of Welfare (co-editor, 2005) and Care and Social Integration in European Societies (co-editor, 2005).

Gillian Robinson is Professor of Social Research at the University of Ulster where she is Director of INCORE (International Conflict Research) and Director of ARK (Northern Ireland Social and Political Archive). She has been involved in the monitoring of social attitudes in Northern Ireland since 1989 and co-directs the Northern Ireland Life and Times survey series. Her research interests include social attitudes, gender roles, policy development in transition and research methodology including issues around researching violent societies and comparative methods. She has published six books and numerous articles on these issues.

Steinar Stjernø is Professor of Social Policy at the Centre for Social Research, Oslo University College, Oslo. He is educated in political science and has published books, articles and research reports on social assistance, poverty and comparative social policy. His most recent book is Solidarity in Europe: The History of Idea, published by Cambridge University Press, 2004. His main research interests involve comparative social policy, normative issues related to social policy and welfare ideology.

Robert Walker is Professor of Social Policy and Fellow of Green College, University of Oxford, Research Fellow at the Institute for Fiscal Studies, London, and a Research Affiliate of the National Poverty Center, University of Michigan. He was formerly Professor of Social Policy at the University of Nottingham and, before that, Professor of Social Policy Research and Director of the Centre for Research on Social Policy, Loughborough University. Recent books include: Social Security and Welfare: Concepts and Comparisons (2005); Welfare to Work: New Labour and the US Experience (with Andreas Cebulla and others, 2005); and The Welfare We Want: The British Challenge for American Reform (with Michael Wiseman, 2003).