

Notes on the Contributors

SHANKARACHARYA is a member of the Board of Governors and an honorary professor at the Indian Council for Research on International Economic Relations (ICRIER). He was chief economic adviser to the government of India from 1993 to 2000.

ROBERTO ÁLVAREZ is a senior economist at the research department of the Central Bank of Chile and a researcher at the Centre for Innovation and Entrepreneurship, University of Chile. He received a B.A. in economics from the University of Chile and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of California – Los Angeles. His research focuses on international trade, evaluation of state-sponsored programs, innovation and productivity.

JAMES WARNER BJÖRKMAN is professor of public policy and Administration at the Institute of Social Studies, The Hague, and professor of public administration and development at Leiden University. He has been a visiting professor at the University of Namibia and the International Centre for the Promotion of Enterprise in Ljubljana, Slovenia. Björkman has also taught at the University of Wisconsin and served as executive director of the International Institute of Comparative Government in Lausanne, Switzerland. He holds a doctorate in political science from Yale University.

CAI FANG holds a Ph.D. in economics from the Graduate School of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences (CASS). Currently he is director of the Institute of Population and Labor Economics, CASS; dean of the Department of Population Studies, Graduate School of CASS; and director of the Center for Human Resources Research, CASS. His research focuses on development theory and policy, agricultural policy, economic reform in China, labor economics and demographic economics.

SEBASTIÁN CLARO is associate professor of economics at Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile, and since December 2007 he has been a board member of the Central Bank of Chile. He received a B.A. degree in economics from the Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile and an M.A. and Ph.D. in economics from the University of California – Los Angeles. His research has mainly focused on the economic transition in China, with special emphasis on the implications of trade and capital market integration for domestic firms, as well as the impact of China's growth in other developing economies.

NATALIA DINELLO has earned doctorate degrees from the University of Pittsburgh and the Soviet Academy of Science. In her current position as Political Environment Scanning Adviser at the United Nations Population Fund, she is responsible for monitoring and analyzing the external environment for the purpose of better strategy development and implementation. In her previous position as Principal Political Scientist at the Secretariat of the Global Development Network, she designed and implemented strategies and programs for building research capacity in developing and transition economies. She served as executive editor of the Global Development Network Series until August 2007 and co-edited three volumes in the series.

DAVID DOLLAR is the World Bank country director for China and Mongolia and has been based in Beijing since 2004. Prior to that he worked in the research complex of the Bank for nine years. He has published a wide range of research papers on trade and growth, growth and poverty, aid effectiveness and economic reform in China and Vietnam. Dollar was the Bank's country economist for Vietnam from 1989 to 1995. Prior to joining the Bank he taught in the economics department at the University of California – Los Angeles. He has a Ph.D. in economics from New York University and a B.A. in Asian Studies from Dartmouth College.

DU YANG is a professor at the Institute of Population and Labor Economics, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. He earned a Ph.D. in economics from the University of Zhejiang in 1999. Much of his research uses primary source data collected in the Chinese labor market to understand how China's rapidly changing economic and policy environment affects the behavior of households and individuals. His studies have focused primarily on migrants, urban labor markets, how national policies affect households/individuals and the implications of labor market development on economic growth.

MAVANNOOR PARAMESWARAN is a lecturer at the Centre for Development Studies, Trivandrum, India. He holds a Ph.D. in economics from Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, India. His areas of research include industrial economics, growth economics and International Trade.

A. VENKAT RAMAN is an associate professor at the Faculty of Management Studies, University of Delhi, and teaches courses in human resource management and health services management. A graduate of the Tata Institute of Social Sciences, Bombay, Raman holds Ph.D. in management from Delhi University. He had been a visiting fellow at the Institute of Social Studies, The Hague, and has been associated with the World Bank Institute, USAID, DFID, GTZ, Population Council, and Population Foundation of India. He is currently working on PPP policy for health sector for the state of Madhya Pradesh and Delhi. His research interests include organizational reforms, human resource management, public-private partnership, and capacity building in the health sector.

YAN SHEN is an associate professor at China Center for Economic Research (CCER), Beijing University. She received her Bachelor in economics from Beijing University in 1997, and her Ph.D. in economics at the University of Southern California in 2003. Her research interests include applied micro-econometrics and economic development in China.

LAWRENCE SUMMERS is President Emeritus of Harvard University and served as secretary of the treasury of the United States from 1999 to 2000. Summers earned a doctorate in economics from Harvard University in 1982 and frequently taught at the university in subsequent years. Summers took leave from Harvard in 1991 to return to Washington, as vice president of development economics and chief economist of the World Bank. Two years later he was named undersecretary of the treasury for international affairs, and on July 2, 1999, the US Senate confirmed Summers as secretary of the treasury.

CHORIKKADAN VEERAMANI is a visiting fellow at the Indira Gandhi Institute of Development Research Mumbai, India. He was previously a fellow at the Indian Council for Research on International Economic Relations (ICRIER), New Delhi, and an assistant professor at the Indian Institute of Technology, Bombay. Veeramani holds a doctorate in economics from Jawaharlal Nehru University. His areas of research include international trade, industrial development and economic reforms in India.

WANG MEIYAN is an associate professor at the Institute of Population and Labor Economics of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, Beijing.

WANG SHAOGUANG is professor of political science at the Chinese University of Hong Kong and the chief editor of the China Review, an interdisciplinary journal on greater China. He studied for his LL.B. at Peking University and his Ph.D. at Cornell University. He taught at Tijiao High School in Wuhan from 1972 to 1977 and Yale University from 1990 to 2000.

YANG YAO is a professor and deputy director of the China Center for Economic Research (CCER), Beijing University. He earned a B.S. in geography and an M.S. in economics from Beijing University and a doctorate in agricultural and applied economics from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He currently serves as the acting director of CCER for academic affairs and editor of China Economic Quarterly.

LINDA Y. YUEH is a fellow in economics at St. Edmund Hall, University of Oxford. She is a visiting professor at the Economics Department of the London Business School and previously worked at the Economics Department at the London School of Economics and Political Science. Yueh is an associate of the Centre for Economic Performance at LSE, and Queen Elizabeth House (Department of International Development) at the University of Oxford. She practiced international corporate law while resident in New York, Beijing and Hong Kong prior to entering academia. Her research interests are in macroeconomics, economic growth and development, economic transition, and law and economics. She originated the Economic Development and Growth book series by World Scientific Publishing.

WUBIAO ZHOU is an assistant professor of sociology in the School of Humanities and Social Sciences at Nanyang Technological University, Singapore. He received his Ph.D. in sociology from Cornell University in 2006 and B.A. in sociology and law from Peking University in 1996. His current research areas include entrepreneurship, corporate governance and R&D.