Contributors

Linda Berg is a doctor in political science from Gothenburg University. During 2007–2008 she is a visiting fellow (postdoc) to the Institute of Governance, University of Edinburgh. Her main research focus is on how individuals feel attached to different territorial levels in society, and how that influences their political (especially welfare) attitudes.

Frode Berglund is a senior researcher at the Norwegian Institute for Urban and Regional Studies. He is a political scientist, and most of his research is related to political behaviour in different forms. In English, he has published articles on party identification and political behaviour among older citizens, and he contributed to the book The European Voter edited by Jaques Thomassen. His latest article is on political recruitment among young citizens.

Terje Andreas Eikemo works as a researcher at SINTEF Health Research, Trondheim and as a research fellow at the Department of Sociology and Political Science at the Norwegian University of Science and Technology (NTNU), Trondheim. His fields of interest are related to research into political and social changes in Eastern Europe (he has been a trainee at the royal Norwegian Embassy in Prague), the welfare state, and public health.

Heikki Ervasti is Professor of Social Policy at the Department of Social Policy, University of Turku, Finland. He is currently the Finnish National Coordinator for the European Social Survey. His main research interests include comparative analyses on labour markets and unemployment, and social, political and economic attitudes.

Torben Fridberg has been a researcher at SFI – The Danish National Centre for Social Research – since 1976. He is the Danish national coordinator for the European Social Survey. His main research interest includes topics around the welfare state.

Mikael Hjerm is an associate professor in the Department of Sociology at Umeå University, Sweden. His research focuses mainly on attitudes of nationalism, racism and questions of integration in different institutional contexts. He is currently interested in how national identities relate to perceptions of the welfare state. Hjerm is the national coordinator for the European Social Survey in Sweden.
Olli Kangas is a professor and head of the research department at the Social Insurance Institution of Finland (KELA). He has published extensively on comparative welfare state and social policy issues.

Øyvin Kleven is a senior advisor at the Division for Data Collection Methods, Statistics Norway. He has a masters in political science from the University of Oslo, and was the project leader for the team that carried out the fieldwork in the European Social Survey in Norway. He has published several papers and articles on political participation and non-sampling errors in survey research.

Ola Listhaug is Professor of Political Science at The Norwegian University of Science and Technology, Trondheim. He is also a research group leader at the Centre for the Study of Civil War, PRIO, director (since 1982) of the Norwegian Values Study, and member of the European Values Study Executive Committee. He has published extensively in political science journals.

Arne Mastekaasa is professor of Sociology at University of Oslo, Department of Sociology and Human Geography. His research falls into several sociological subfields like social stratification, job attitudes, labour markets, and mental health, and he has published more than 40 articles in international journals. Current projects include studies of the impact of education and social origins on labour market success and job mobility, and job motivation among professional employees.

Mikael Nordenmark is a Professor in the Department of Health Sciences, Mid-Sweden University. His main research interests are relationships among labour market situation, family life, gender and well-being. He has been a research fellow at the Swedish Collegium for Advanced Study in the Social Sciences (SCASSS) in Uppsala, Sweden, and at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences (CASBS) in Stanford, USA.

Kristen Ringdal is Professor of Sociology in the Department of Sociology and Political Science, the Norwegian University of Science and Technology, Trondheim. He is the Norwegian National Coordinator for the European Social Survey, and is an elected member of the Royal Norwegian Society of Sciences and Letters. He has published articles in a broad range of journals.