ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The acknowledgements which I owe to the many administrators, politicians, writers and students at all levels who have helped me to understand their systems and benefit from their work and insights are so many that it is hardly possible to name the great majority of them. I can assure all that their contributions have been deeply appreciated, and that the failure to mention them here by name does not imply less regard for the generous help they have given me.

Chronologically my first contacts with the international world of local government were at conferences in the 1960s organised by the International Union of Local Authorities (IULA) and the Conference of European Municipalities (CEM), thanks to Henry Maddick, the Director of INLOGOV, who encouraged my attendance there, Paul Bongers, the director of the British branch of IULA and CEM and his colleagues who were largely responsible for the British contribution to their organisation, and also Jan van Putten, the former long-serving Secretary-General of IULA and his colleagues in The Hague.

Next I owe very much indeed to those who helped in the international consultancies in which I was engaged in the 1970s and early 1980s. Seeing the outcome of the adoption of foreign models in East Africa and Turkey gave me the opportunity to evaluate the results of the adoption of West European models abroad within different cultures. I am indebted here especially to members of the staff of OECD in Paris, especially Clifford Glover and Andrew Horgan, who gave valuable support to work in Istanbul and in Europe and gave me contacts in European countries at official levels in seminars and through introductions.

A third main source has been in connection with studies for English and Welsh local authority associations, and in particular the study in 1983 on the Government and Administration of Metropolitan Areas in Western Democracies for the English metropolitan counties and that for the three main local authority associations in 1985-86 on Local Government in Other Western Democracies. In these studies and afterwards I was able to draw on generous help from scholars and administrators visiting INLOGOV from abroad as well as on international visits, and also to try out my analysis of situations in their own countries on postgraduate students, particularly those from Germany and Italy. Japanese scholars seconded to and visiting INLOGOV have been a great and generous source of help in the development of the chapter on Japan.
Acknowledgements

Among those who gave valuable help may be singled out Professor Jean-Claude Thoenig for early guidance in 1985 and some valuable recent help from Dr Christian Lefèvre in 1992; Dr Bruno Dente and Dr Emilio Samek-Lodovici of the City of Milan for frequent help on the Italian system, administration; the late Professor Frido Wagener of the Postgraduate School of Administrative Sciences in Speyer and Professor Gerhard Banner, Director of the KGSSt in Cologne, for much help and advice over a long period; Professor Ernst Jonsson of the University of Stockholm; Palle Mikkelsen of the Danish Municipal Research Institute in Copenhagen; Professors T.J. Plunkett and G.M. Betts, especially for advice on Canadian sources, provincial officers in Toronto and, more recently, Dr Lionel Feldman; Professor Kano and colleagues, while seconded to the University of Birmingham, Professor Yashimoto Kawasaki of Chuo University, and, on repeated occasions, Professor Akira Kobayashi of Kanazawa University. I am also heavily indebted to many who have sent me relevant papers. For Chapter 10 I have been heavily dependent on the English publications provided by the Jichi Sogo Center in Tokyo through the courtesy of Director-General Katsuomi Obayashi, without which the Japanese chapter would hardly have been feasible. Greatly appreciated help was also given by colleagues in countries that are referred to in Part I but not included in Part II — amongst others Dr Carmel Coyle of the University College Dublin and Professors Risto Harisalo and, Paavo Hoikka and their colleagues in Finland, who produced a description of the Finnish system which parallels to some extent the chapters in Part II (details are given in the first section of the references part of this book under the name of Simo Hakamäki).

I have already mentioned the international local government associations and OECD. Other facilitators of the interchange of knowledge in this field to whom I owe a major debt include those associated with the Council for Local and Regional Authorities in Europe, the International Political Science Association, the European Council for Political Research and the Institut International d'Administration Publique of the Prime Minister's office in Paris. Also of great help have been seminars on Metropolitan Government in Oxford, sponsored by the Economic and Social Research Council and organised by L.J. Sharpe; on local government employees in Bochum organised for the European Council for Political Research by Drs Richard Balme and Vincent Hoffmann-Martinit; on a similar field at the Institut International d'Administration Publique in Paris, following which Marie-Christine Henry-Meiningen of the Institut sent me valuable information; and on developments in European local government organised xvii

by colleagues Drs Richard Batley and Gerry Stoker at INLOGOV.

I owe an outstanding debt to my colleagues in INLOGOV who have given me the opportunity to spend time on studies of local government in countries abroad and have given me much encouragement in these matters. I was most fortunate to serve as a research associate under Dr A.H. Marshall when I joined the Institute in the 1960s. He possessed a knowledge unparalleled in Britain of local government throughout the world. Recently Professor John Stewart, currently head of Birmingham University’s School of Public Policy, has read and commented most helpfully on drafts of Chapter 1 in particular. But none of those named above carry any responsibility for the final text. Its faults are entirely my own.

The initial typing and word-processing of the book have also been entirely my own. I am nevertheless very indebted to the secretarial staff of INLOGOV who gave me unfailing support over the years. Also a special word of thanks to Tony Gaize of the university’s Physics Department who undertook to convert the contents of discs that had evolved since the early 1980s on a now antiquated word-processing system into a language that modern laser-printers can understand — a much more time-consuming task than we initially anticipated — and Robert Wheeler who effectively undertook the conversion of my discs into the final form.

The main burden of support has fallen very much on my wife Susanne. The work has prevented me from giving her as much help as might reasonably have been expected, particularly on happy but time-consuming preoccupations with grandchildren.