Contributors

Martin Andersson is Professor of Industrial Economics at Blekinge Institute of Technology (BTH) and Professor of Innovation Studies at CIRCLE, Lund University. His research focuses on the interplay between innovation, technological change and business dynamics, as well as on the role of cities and local labour markets in fostering innovation and entrepreneurship.

Pia Arenius (D.Sc.Tech) is Professor of Entrepreneurship at RMIT University and Hanken School of Economics. She is currently studying nascent entrepreneurs and opportunity processes. She is also interested in networks and social capital theory, and the relationship between individual and firm-level social capital.

Roger E. Bolton is Professor Emeritus of Economics at Williams College. His previous research has included work on the ‘sense of place’ as a form of social capital and on the role of social capital in entrepreneurship. He has been a visiting professor in planning departments at the University of Pennsylvania, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, and at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Niels Bosma is Assistant Professor with Utrecht University School of Economics and coordinator of the Utrecht University Social Entrepreneurship Initiative. Niels is particularly interested in individuals’ entrepreneurial and innovative behaviour in different regional and social contexts.

Asimina Christoforou has a PhD in Economics and teaches at the Athens University of Economics and Business. She has published in a number of journals including: Journal of Institutional Economics, American Journal of Economics and Sociology, Journal of Economic Issues, Forum for Social Economics, Cambridge Journal of Economics.

Maria Emmelin is Professor of Global Health at the department of Clinical Sciences, Social Medicine and Global Health, Lund University, Sweden. Her research has focused on social determinants of health and disease, evaluation of public health interventions, gender-based violence and social capital and health.
Malin Eriksson is an Associate Professor in Public Health at the department of Public Health and Clinical Medicine at Umeå University, Sweden. Her research concerns social determinants of health, social inequalities in health, social capital and health promotion, and migration and health among unaccompanied refugee children.

Maryann P. Feldman is the Heninger Distinguished Professor in the Department of Public Policy at the University of North Carolina. Her research interests focus on the areas of innovation, the commercialization of academic research and the factors that promote technological change and economic growth.

Emanuele Ferragina is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Science Po Paris, and Associate Member of the Department of Social Policy and Intervention at the University of Oxford. He is interested in the political economy of the welfare state, family policy, social capital and the innovative use of the comparative method.

Riikka Franžén (MSc. Econ.) is a doctoral researcher at the University of Turku. Her research interests include entrepreneurial opportunities and their creation, women entrepreneurship, and social capital.

Michael Fritsch is Full Professor of Economics and the Chair of Business Dynamics, Innovation, and Economic Change at the Friedrich-Schiller-University Jena, Germany. He is also a Research Associate at the German Institute of Economic Research (DIW Berlin), Research Professor at the Halle Institute for Economic Research (IWH) as well as Associate Editor of the academic journals Regional Studies and Small Business Economics. The main fields of his recent research are entrepreneurship and innovation.

Tsuyoshi Hatori is Associate Professor in the Department of Environmental Design at Ehime University. His research subjects include regional planning and conflict management.

Dessy Irawati (PhD FeRSA) is currently a full-time executive consultant and Business Representative of BNI (Bank Negara Indonesia) 1946 Bank in the Netherlands. Furthermore, she has researched and taught international business management, investigating overlaps with the fields of strategy, organization and learning.

Bengt Johannisson is a Senior Professor of Entrepreneurship at Linnaeus University. From 1998 to 2007 he was the editor-in-chief of Entrepreneurship & Regional Development. His current research interests are process and practice theories, personal networking and enactive methodology.
Contributors

Börje Johansson is Professor of Economics at the Jönköping International Business School (JIBS), with a second affiliation at the Royal Institute of Technology in Stockholm. In recent decades his research has focused on R&D, knowledge accession, and innovation efforts in the context of economic change processes that affect firm performance, measured by sales, productivity and exports.

Laura King is an Analyst at the New Zealand Treasury. She graduated with a Bachelor of Business Analysis with First Class Honours in Economics and Accounting at the University of Waikato and conducted dissertation research on migrant entrepreneurship and social capital.

Kiyoshi Kobayashi is Professor of Infrastructure Economics at the Graduate School of Management, Kyoto University and Professor of Planning and Management Theory, Graduate School of Engineering, Kyoto University. His research subjects are related to urban and regional policies. Among others, regional entrepreneurship in rural and small-medium sized areas are current major research concerns.

Johan P. Larsson is Assistant Professor of Economics at Jönköping University and researcher at the Swedish Entrepreneurship Forum. His main fields of research are regional and urban economics and the geography of entrepreneurship.

Malin Lindberg, Associate Professor in Gender and Technology at Luleå University of Technology, Sweden, studies inclusive innovation processes and policies, with specific focus on social innovation, gendered innovation and place innovation. She specializes in participatory research, where new knowledge is developed jointly by researchers and societal actors.

Maria Ljunggren is currently a senior performance auditor at the Swedish National Audit Office. Her research interest is regional collaboration and social capital building in relation to policy efforts. Her doctoral thesis focused on collaboration between higher education institutions and the public and private sector to understand the relation between collaboration, policy and internal and external social capital building.

Jesús Peiró-Palomino is a postdoctoral researcher at the University of Valencia. He holds a PhD in Economics from Jaume I University (Spain). His research interests are regional economic growth, income convergence and social capital.

Elena Pisani has a PhD in land economics. She is a full-time researcher and adjunct professor at the University of Padova (Italy), where she teaches Microeconomics and Project Planning and Evaluation.
Marcela Ramírez Pasillas is an Assistant Professor in Entrepreneurship and UN Project Manager of PRME (United Nations Principles of Responsible Management Education) at Jönköping International Business School (JIBS) in Jönköping University in Sweden. She is interested in entrepreneurial phenomena that are socially, culturally and politically embedded triggering different sustainable and societal entrepreneurship(s).

Jacques Poot is the Professor of Population Economics in the National Institute of Demographic and Economic Analysis (NIDEA) at the University of Waikato in New Zealand. He has been leading several large-scale research programmes in New Zealand and Europe concerned with immigrant integration, regional population change and migration impact assessment.

Yongjian Pu is a Professor in the School of Economics and Business Administration at Chongqing University. He has authored more than 200 papers and 20 monographs, focusing on game theory, energy economics, regional economics and tourism management.

Matthew Roskruge is a Research Fellow in the National Institute of Demographic and Economic Analysis (NIDEA) at the University of Waikato in New Zealand. His PhD research was on models of social capital formation in New Zealand. Before joining NIDEA, he was the Senior Health Economist at the National Health Committee.

Roel Rutten is Assistant Professor in the School of Social and Behavioural Sciences at Tilburg University, the Netherlands. His research focuses on the geography of innovation, the organization of innovation and networks and innovation. Previously Rutten worked as a consultant of regional innovation policy for ERAC (European Regional Affairs Consultants).

Veronique Schutjens is Associate Professor in Economic Geography at the University of Utrecht, the Netherlands. Her research interests are spatial variations in entrepreneurial activity and attitude; new firm growth, survival, and performance; entrepreneurial and firm networks; and the interdependency between local entrepreneurs and neighbourhood communities.

Eddy Setiawan is now serving as Country Manager in a Norwegian telecommunications company. He obtained his Master’s degree in Innovation, Creativity and Entrepreneurship from Newcastle University in the UK and his Bachelor’s degree in Financial Management from the University of Indonesia.
Contributors

Timothy F. Slaper is Director of Economic Analysis at the Indiana Business Research Center, where he leads a research team engaged in industry and workforce analysis, regional economic analyses, demographic estimates and projections, trade and foreign investment analysis, measuring innovation and educational performance and the drivers of regional economic growth.

Michael F. Thompson is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of North Texas. He conducts research on labour and socioeconomic policy, as well as contemporary social movements in collaboration with sociologists, political scientists and economic development professionals. His current projects focus on the political process and economic impact of minimum wage laws, the role of social capital in economic development, and the role and expectations of social movement participants.

Emili Tortosa-Ausina is Professor of Applied Economics at the University Jaume I (Spain). His main fields of research are efficiency and productivity analysis, banking and finance, and regional economics. He has been visiting scholar at several institutions such as the University of New South Wales, Oregon State University, Aston Business School and the University of Leicester.

Beate Volker is Professor of Sociology at the University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands. She is director of the programme group ‘Institutions, Inequality and Life Courses’. Her research is on personal networks and how spatial conditions influence the emergence of network ties and the creation and distribution of social resources.

Joakim Wernberg is a PhD student in economic geography and innovation studies at CIRCLE, Lund University, and Senior Policy Analyst at the Chamber of Industry and Commerce in Southern Sweden. His primary research interests are regional and urban economics, complex social systems and technological development.

Hans Westlund is Professor in Urban and Regional Studies at the Department of Urban Planning and Environment, School of Architecture and Built Environment, KTH Royal Institute of Technology, Stockholm, Sweden. He is Professor in Entrepreneurship at Jönköping International Business School, Sweden. He is also affiliated to the Institute for Developmental and Strategic Analysis (IRSA), Ljubljana, Slovenia. Hans is one of the editors of Springer Book Series Advances in Spatial Science. He has been Visiting Professor at Tokyo University and Kyoto University, Japan and President of the Western Regional Science Association (USA).
Handbook of social capital and regional development

Michael Wyrwich is Research Associate at the Friedrich Schiller University Jena, Germany. The main fields of his recent research are entrepreneurship, regional labour markets, and persistence of economic activity.

Ailun Xiong has a joint PhD in the School of Economics and Business Administration of Chongqing University and the Department of Urban Planning and Environment of KTH Royal Institute of Technology. He has authored several papers on social capital, urbanization, civic engagement and regional development.

Ted Douglas Zoller is Director of the Center for Entrepreneurial Studies and T.W. Lewis Associate Professor of Strategy and Entrepreneurship at the Kenan-Flagler Business School. His research focuses on entrepreneurial firm performance and the social networking implications of entrepreneurial and venture dealmaking networks.