Contributors

Matilda Ardenfors is a political scientist with an interest in the design and implementation of policy, in particular the relation between policy for growth and labour market policy. She is currently working as a management consultant at Ramböll Management Consulting, a consultancy operating in northern Europe. She is head of a department working mainly in the field of growth and innovation policy towards the public sector.

Ilinca Benson is Research Director at the Centre for Business and Policy Studies in Stockholm. She holds a PhD in Business Administration from Stockholm School of Economics. Her dissertation thesis dealt with transition in the labour market and the role of outplacement agencies.

Erik Berntson is Associate Professor and Senior Lecturer in Work and Organizational Psychology at the Department of Psychology at Stockholm University. His research concerns work and organizational psychology in general – how individuals act, react and perceive their working life. Also, how the labour market changes and how these changes affect working life in general and the individual in particular is of interest. Specifically, he has focused on the concept of employability from a psychological perspective, where he has investigated both what determines employability and what the consequences of being employable are.

Christina Garsten is Professor at the Department of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University, and Chair of the Executive Board of Score (Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research). She recently joined Copenhagen Business School as Professor of Globalization and Organization. She researches globalization processes in corporations and markets. Her current project is on the role of think tanks in setting agendas for global governance. Earlier works have focused on transnational organizational culture, on organizational visions of transparency and accountability for transnational trade, and on policy changes towards flexibility and employability in work life.

Marie Hjalmarsson holds a PhD in Education and is Senior Lecturer at the Department of Nursing, Health and Culture and the Chair of the Board of Education at University West, Sweden. Her research focuses on working life with a special interest in learning and how it can be studied and understood in different ways. She is currently focusing on competence and inter-professional learning in welfare professions, as well as the shifting strategies for work life integrated learning in higher education institutions. Her earlier works have focused on power and resistance in caring professions, and on gender in relation to competence and professional identity.

Jessica Lindvert is Associate Professor in Political Science with an interest in governance, comparative politics and process tracing. She currently holds a position as Director of Education at the Swedish National Agency for Education.

Gunilla Olofsdotter holds a PhD in Sociology and is based in the field of work life studies. She has a particular interest in examining the consequences of flexibility for individuals and work organizations. Earlier works have focused on research on temporary agency work, critical management studies of welfare projects and gender mainstreaming of public organizations. She is currently involved in a research project on labour market migration from Sweden to Norway mediated by temporary work agencies in cooperation with researchers from Work Research Institute in Oslo and Oslo University.

Julia Peralta holds a PhD in Economic History and is an Assistant Professor at the School of Health and Medical Sciences at Örebro University. Her research deals with global economic problems and the construction of normality/anomaly, more specifically, on social policy, the emergence of the welfare state, medical history and economic development. Her earlier work focused on the 1990s as a period of economic crisis and mass unemployment. A point of departure for Peralta’s research is that definitions of social problems are complex processes of social construction where notions of unemployment are understood and conceptualized differently over time. Frames of interpretation are seen to contribute to the construction and/or (re)production of categories of unemployed within the context of active Swedish labour market policies.

Ida Seing has a PhD in medical science with a background in political science. She is a researcher at the Department of Medical and Health Sciences, Linköping University. She conducts research on the organization of social activation policies in local practice. Her dissertation project puts focus on the Swedish social security system by analysing welfare state actors’ and employers’ role in the return to work process of workers on sick-leave. Her research interests include social and labour market policies and work life issues.

Renita Thedvall is Associate Professor in Social Anthropology, Director of Studies at the Department of Social Anthropology and Deputy Director of Score (Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research) at Stockholm University. She is based in the field of policy and organizational anthropology. Earlier works have focused on how policies around quality in work and fair trade are developed, shaped and framed via indicators and standards. Currently, she is working on how the management model Lean is negotiated, discussed and implemented and how it operates in public preschools.

Lars Walter is Senior Lecturer at the School of Business, Economics and Law, University of Gothenburg. His research focuses on the organization and practices of labour markets and the intersection between labour markets and the organization of work and employment. Some of his recent publications are: ‘The role of organizational objects in construction projects: The case of the collapse and restoration of the Tjörn Bridge’ in Construction Management and Economics (2014) together with Alexander Styhre; ‘Objects-in-use and organizing in action nets: A case of an infusion’ in Journal of Management Inquiry (2013) together with Kajsa Lindberg; and Assembling Health Care Organizations: Practice, Materiality and Institutions (Palgrave Macmillan 2012) together with Kajsa Lindberg and Alexander Styhre.