Contributors

Yamini Aiyar is Director of the Accountability Initiative at the Centre for Policy Research in Delhi. This is a research group that tracks government planning, budgeting and decision-making systems in social-sector programs. Prior to joining the Accountability Initiative, Aiyar worked at the World Bank and the Ford Foundation. She has extensive research and implementation experience in issues related to strengthening citizen participation in public services. Aiyar has an MS degree in development studies from the London School of Economics and an MA in social and political sciences at St. Edmund’s College, University of Cambridge.

Babken Babajanian is Programme Tutor at the Institute of Public Affairs of the London School of Economics. He has experience in policy-oriented research, analysis and operational work on social protection, social exclusion, local governance and community-driven development gained at the London School of Economics, ADB, and the Overseas Development Institute. Babajanian has a PhD in social policy from the London School of Economics and a Master’s degree in international affairs from Columbia University.

Subhash Bhatnagar is an Adjunct Professor at the Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad, where he has taught for 28 years and held the positions of Dean, member of the board of governors and CMC Chair Professorship. From 2000 to 2006, he worked as an advisor at the World Bank to mainstream e-governance in the institution’s operations. Bhatnagar has also advised countries on e-governance strategies, and is currently working on India’s National eGovernance Plan. He has published seven books and numerous papers on governance, poverty alleviation and education.

Giorgio Brosio is Professor of Public Economics in the Department of Economics and Statistics at the University of Torino. He has also taught at the University of Bari and the University of Geneva. From 2009 to 2012, he served as the President of the Società Italiana di Economia Pubblica (Italian Public Economics Association) and remains a board member. His research interests are in public choice and fiscal federalism. He has worked extensively as a consultant for international institutions, including the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank and the European Union on public sector reform and development, with particular emphasis on taxation, natural resources and decentralization. Brosio has written numerous books and published articles in academic journals.

Joseph J. Capuno is Associate Professor and former coordinator of the Health Economics Program in the University of the Philippines’ School of Economics. He has a PhD in economics from the University of the Philippines and completed his postdoctoral studies at Princeton University. He has published research papers in academic journals and co-edited several books. His areas of interest include fiscal decentralization, governance, local and regional development, health financing and health policy. Capuno’s most recent research was a randomized experiment on social health insurance, household shocks and the empirical political economy in the Philippines.

Joppe de Ree is a consultant for the World Bank, where he leads research projects on education. These have included an empirical assessment of the impacts of Indonesia’s teacher certification program. Results of some of his previous research have appeared in the Journal of Development Economics and Journal of Public Economics. He has also conducted empirical research on civil wars and measuring household welfare.

Anil B. Deolalikar is Founding Dean of the School of Public Policy at the University of California, Riverside. He is also Professor of Economics and Director of the University of California Global Health Institute’s One Health Center. Prior to 2003, he taught at the University of Washington (Seattle), the University of Pennsylvania and Harvard University. He has a PhD in economics from Stanford University. Deolalikar has published four books and over 70 articles on the economics of child nutrition, health, education, poverty and social protection in developing countries. He is co-editor of the Journal of Asian and African Studies and Journal of Developing Societies. In 2007, he was elected a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Xuehui Han is an economist in ADB’s Economic Research and Regional Cooperation Department. Prior to joining ADB, she was Assistant Professor at the School of Management, Fudan University, Shanghai. She has a PhD and Master’s degree in economics from the University of Oslo, and a Bachelor’s degree in accounting from Fudan University. Her research interests are in econometric modeling and its applications to the real estate market, unemployment, and poverty. Han has published a number of research papers in academic journals.
Shikha Jha is Principal Economist in the Economic Research and Regional Cooperation Department of the ADB, where she leads research on public economics, with a special focus on public expenditure, food and fuel subsidies, and public services. In an earlier role at ADB, Jha led Armenia and Tajikistan country teams, working closely with the governments of these countries to develop ADB’s country strategies and operational programs. Prior to joining ADB, Jha was Professor of Economics at the Indira Gandhi Institute of Development Research in Mumbai and a consultant to the World Bank, United Nations Development Programme, United States Department of Agriculture and the International Food Policy Research Institute, among others. Jha has a PhD in economics from the Indian Statistical Institute in Delhi and did postdoctoral research at the London School of Economics.

Haider A. Khan is the John Evans University Professor and Professor of Economics at the Joseph Korbel School of International Studies, University of Denver. He has served as a senior economic adviser to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in Geneva, a consultant to the United Nations Development Programme and an international adviser to the Arab Trade and Human Development project in Cairo. He was a Visiting Fellow at the Asian Development Bank Institute in Tokyo and at the World Institute for Development Economics Research in Helsinki. Khan was a Visiting Professor at the Graduate School of Economics, University of Tokyo and at several universities in the United States and Europe. He has a PhD from Cornell University. His work includes modeling economic systems, particularly economy-wide modeling of technology, capital flows and financial crises, and the political and economic theories of democracy and justice. He has published 17 books and more than one hundred articles in professional journals such as the Journal of Development Economics, Journal of Development Studies, Journal of Policy Modeling and Oxford Journal of Development Studies.

Menno Pradhan is a Professor in Project and Program Evaluation for International Development at the VU University Amsterdam and the University of Amsterdam. His research focus is on impact evaluation of health and education interventions in developing countries. He holds a PhD from Tilburg University. Pradhan has also worked at the World Bank in Jakarta and was a visiting fellow at Cornell University. He has researched the effects of health insurance, social funds, teacher training and early childhood development interventions on human development outcomes, as well as dimensions of poverty, including health inequality and the impact of conflicts.
M.G. Quibria is Professor of Economics at the Morgan State University in Baltimore. Prior to this, he was Assistant Chief Economist at the then Economics and Development Resource Center of ADB and Senior Advisor at the Asian Development Bank Institute. Quibria has held various teaching and research posts, including at the University of Dhaka; Nuffield College, University of Oxford; Boston University and the Foundation for Advanced Studies on International Development-National Graduate Institute for Policy Studies (FASID-GRIPS) graduate program in International Development in Tokyo; and the Singapore Management University. He is the author of over 70 articles in professional economics and development journals and editor, co-editor and author of a number of scholarly volumes. His areas of research include economic development and international economics. He has a PhD in economics from Princeton University.

Pilipinas F. Quising is Senior Economics Officer in ADB’s Economic Research and Regional Cooperation Department. She received her BS degree in business economics and MA in economics from the University of the Philippines. Before joining ADB as a staff member in 2000, she was consultant to an ADB cross-country poverty study and was a research associate at various institutions, working on projects on public health policy, local government decentralization and international trade.

Kunal Sen is Professor of Development Economics at the University of Manchester and Professorial Fellow of the Brooks World Poverty Institute at that university. His principal areas of research are economic growth, macroeconomics, international trade and the analysis of poverty and social exclusion. Sen’s recent books are State–Business Relations and Economic Development in Africa and India (Routledge 2012); Trade Policy, Inequality and Performance in Indian Manufacturing (Routledge 2008); International Competitiveness, Investment and Finance: A Case Study of India (Routledge 2003), with A.G. Kumar and Rajendra Vaidya; and Saving, Investment and Growth in India (Oxford University Press 2002), with Premachandra Athukorala. Sen was awarded the Sanjaya Lall Prize in 2006 and Dudley Seers Prize in 2003.

Michael Walton has taught at the Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University since 2004, and has been a Visiting Fellow at the Centre for Policy Research, Delhi, since 2007. He was V.K.R.V. Rao Professor at the Institute for Social and Economic Change, Bangalore, in 2008 and 2009, and Visiting Professor at the Delhi School of Economics in 2008. Walton has worked for the World Bank in Brazil, Indonesia, Mexico, and Zimbabwe. He was Director of the 1995 World Development Report for the section on labor, Co-director of the 2006 report, and the World Bank’s Chief Economist for East Asia. With Vijayendra Rao, Walton edited Culture and Public Action (Stanford University Press 2004) and, with Santiago Levy, edited No Growth without Equity? Inequality, Interests, and Competition in Mexico (Palgrave Macmillan and the World Bank 2009). Walton’s current research is focused on India in the areas of rural education, inequality, the political economy of cities, corporate behavior and politics of state-society relations and state-business interactions.

Juzhong Zhuang is Deputy Chief Economist and Deputy Director General in ADB’s Economic Research and Regional Cooperation Department. He has written extensively on development issues in Asia and his recent publications include Inclusive Growth toward a Harmonious Society in China (China Planning Press 2008); Diagnosing the Philippine Economy (Anthem Press 2009); Poverty, Inequality, and Inclusive Growth in Asia (Anthem Press 2010); Diagnosing the Indonesia Economy (Anthem Press 2012); and Inequality in Asia and the Pacific (Routledge 2014). Zhuang is the lead author of a number of ADB publications, including The Economics of Climate Change in Southeast Asia (2009), Confronting Rising Inequality in Asia (2012), and Growing beyond the Low-Cost Advantage: How the People’s Republic of China Can Avoid the Middle Income Trap (2012). He has a PhD in economics from the University of Manchester.

---

* The Asian Development Bank recognizes China by the name People’s Republic of China.