

Contributors

Diego Acosta is a Reader in European and Migration law at the University of Bristol, UK. He is also a research collaborator at the ‘Prospects for International Migration Governance’ (MIGPROSP) project. He has published widely in the area including his last monograph published by Cambridge University Press in 2018 (The National versus the Foreigner in South America). He has advised various governments, political parties, international organisations, law firms and non-governmental organisations in Europe, the USA, South America and Africa.

Leiza Brumat is a Research Fellow in the MIGPROSP project. Before joining the Migration Policy Centre, she was a lecturer in International Relations, Regional Integration and International Organisations and a Research Fellow for the National Council of Scientific and Technical Research (CONICET) of Argentina. She was awarded a PhD in Social Sciences by Flacso–Argentina with a thesis on migration policies and the free movement of persons in Mercosur.

Eva Dick, PhD, is a senior researcher in the Programme on Political Order, Values and Peace at the German Development Institute/Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE), currently working in the BMZ-funded project titled ‘Reducing root causes of forced displacement and managing migration’, focusing on regional migration governance in the Horn of Africa region. Her research centres on the multilevel governance of migration and urbanisation, particularly in Sub-Saharan Africa and Latin America.

Cristián Doña-Reveco is Associate Professor of Sociology and Director of the Office for Latino/Latin American Studies at the University of Nebraska, Omaha, USA. In Chile, he is a Research Associate at Universidad Diego Portales’ Instituto de Investigación en Ciencias Sociales and Adjunct Researcher in the Center for the Study of Social Conflict and Social Cohesion. He researches migration decisions, the relationship between emigrants and their state of origin, and South American migration policies. He holds a PhD in Sociology and History from Michigan State University.

Mayra Feddersen is Assistant Professor in administrative law at Universidad Adolfo Ibáñez. She holds a PhD in Jurisprudence and Social Policy, and a Master of Law, both from the University of California, Berkeley, USA. She also holds a law degree from the Universidad Diego Portales, Chile. Her research deals with immigration policies and the role of administrative bureaucracies in their development. Her research interests are in administrative law, immigration law, international human rights law, the sociology of law and qualitative research methods.

Victoria Finn researches international migration in South America and the European Union (EU), particularly migrant voting and citizenship in both origin and destination countries. She is attaining a dual-degree PhD in Political Science at the Universidad Diego Portales, Chile, and Leiden University, the Netherlands. She also holds a Master of Arts in International Affairs from the Elliott School of International Affairs at the George Washington University, USA.

Andrew Geddes holds a Chair in Migration Studies at the European University Institute, Florence, Italy where he is also Director of the Migration Policy Centre (MPC). For the period 2014–19 he was awarded an ‘Advanced Grant’ by the European Research Council for the MIGPROSP project. A political scientist by training, he has authored, co-authored or edited 15 books and more than 100 other publications.

Leila Hadj Abdou is a Research Fellow at the MPC at the European University Institute. Before coming to the MPC she held teaching and research positions at the University of Sheffield (UK), the School for Advanced International Studies (SAIS, Johns Hopkins University) in Washington DC (USA), and the University of Vienna (Austria). Leila has published on migration governance, immigration and immigrant integration policies, the regulation and contestation of Muslim practices in Europe, and the populist radical right.

Oleg Korneev is a Research Fellow at the CERAL, Faculty of Law, Political and Social Sciences, University of Paris 13 (France) and Associate Research Fellow at the Laboratory for Social Anthropological Research (LSAR), Tomsk State University (Russia). His research focuses on international organisations, global migration governance, expert knowledge, and migration policies in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. He is currently leading a project exploring contestations of international organisations working in Central Asia (GLOBALCONTEST, 2016–19) funded by the French National Research Agency (ANR).

Sandra Lavenex is Professor of European and International Politics at the University of Geneva and Vice-Dean of the School of Social Sciences. She is also Visiting Professor at the College of Europe. Her research focuses on regional and international cooperation on asylum and migration and the external relations of the European Union.

Andrey Leonov is an Assistant Professor at the Department of European and International Law, Faculty of Law, Lobachevsky University of Nizhny Novgorod (Russia). He is also coordinator of the Jean Monnet Module EUGLOBE (2015–18) and the Jean Monnet Project EUSECU-POLE (2016–18). His research interests focus mainly on European Human Rights Law, European and Eurasian migration law and policies, interaction between the EU and the Council of Europe legal frameworks, European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) case-law in the Russian Legal Order.

Luca Lixi is a Doctoral Researcher at the University of Sheffield, UK. His research is part of the MIGPROSP project. Luca has worked for two years in the European Commission on external relations of migration governance and as a consultant for the European Commission, the European Migration Forum and the Transatlantic Council on Migration organised by the Migration Policy Institute (MPI). He was also visiting researcher at MPI Europe and holds an MSc from the LSE in International Migration and Public Policy.

Nicola Piper is Professor of International Migration at the University of Sydney, Australia where she is also the Founding Director of the Sydney Asia Pacific Migration Centre. Her current research interests focus on international labour migration and advocacy politics in relation to the promotion of a rights-based approach to global and regional migration governance. She is (co-)chief editor of the international peer-reviewed journal Global Social Policy and external advisor on migration research with the UN Research Institute for Social Development, Geneva.

Stefan Rother is a researcher and lecturer at the Arnold-Bergstraesser-Institute at the University of Freiburg, Germany. His research focus is on international migration, global governance, social movements, regional integration and non-/post-Western theories of international relations. His research has been published in journals such as the Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies, Third World Quarterly, Cooperation and Conflict, European Journal of East Asian Studies, International Migration, Migration Studies and several edited volumes. His latest monograph is Democratization through Migration? Political Remittances and Participation of Philippine Return Migrants (Lexington 2016, with Christl Kessler).

Benjamin Schraven, PhD, is a senior researcher of the German Development Institute/Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE). His research focuses on ‘environmental migration’, migration and development and migration governance. He has been active as scientific advisor for migration issues for the Federal German Ministry for Economic Cooperation and Development as well as a Guest Lecturer at the University of Ghana. Furthermore, he has also done migration-related consultancy work for, among others, UNICEF and several development cooperation agencies.

Gerasimos Tsourapas is a Lecturer in Middle East Politics at the University of Birmingham, UK. His research focuses on the politics of migrants, refugees, and diasporas in the Middle East, and has been supported by the British Academy and the Council for British Research in the Levant. His work has appeared in International Studies Quarterly, International Political Science Review, Third World Quarterly and International Studies Perspectives. His first book, The Politics of Egyptian Migration – Strategies for Survival in Autocracies, has been published by Cambridge University Press (2019).

Marcia Vera Espinoza is a Lecturer in Human Geography at Queen Mary University of London, UK, and Associate Researcher at the MIGPROSP Project. Before joining Queen Mary University of London, Marcia held a research and teaching position at the Department of Politics, University of Sheffield, UK. Her research focuses on refugee and migrant integration, migration governance and immigration policies in Latin America. Her work has recently been published in Global Policy, Forced Migration Review, Geopolitics and Development Policy Review. She holds a PhD in Human Geography from the University of Sheffield.